thunders, did a ray of light gently beam from the upper sanctuary on one little spot in Judea. That ray of light, like the bird of destiny sent forth over the waters of the Antedeluvian world, plucked not the "Olive branch," but plucked the Bible from the darknsss of ages, and gave it to the family of man up to the latest posterity. O! vast Omnipotence of religious thought! Earth has no other thought like this The human mind can rest on nothing half so glorious. For a moment, with unsandaled feet, think of the universean immensity to the bounds of which the wings of thought, urge them even so wildly, shall never, never flit-thronged in all its limitless extent with ordered worlds, willed into existence by that Being of whom tongue can not speak, or mind conceive. Endeavor to embrace it in thy conception; spread the widest wing of imagination; and to assist, open the Oceanic eye of contemplation. And then think, that in all there is no thought so supreme in sublimity, as that agent which kept within her most secret chamber, the "Great Light" by which the souls of men are to be weighed, and by which they are to wing their tireless flight in endless ages, through sunlight sleeps upon their hills. Heav- gence. en's own music swells along their vales. Let us then, with Faith, Hope, and Charity, ever look to the supernal mansions beyond the clounded canopy, "adorned with a fretwork of mystic stars," where all good Masons expect to arrive at last.
